BARNEY: Do you think that the phone-in concept, perhaps, might be an answer to the problems that we hear on radio stations, this late take of what you're talking about in the city?

THEA: You're talking about feedback now. I think that phone-in is a concept which I think will become more and more, and that's the way, and it is also very good, and for a lot of people, and we have a lot of music programs and a lot of other programs that we can use that phone-in, but we do have a lot of problems, you know? Other people are using that phone-in, it is a very good form, and we have a lot of people in the city, who are like that, but that phone-in is a good way. But now it's just a way. You're right, this is the way, and it is also for a lot of people. And in the city, we have a lot of people who are like that, but that phone-in is a very good way.

From our point of view, the cable TV point of view, is presented for whatever reason, or anybody else? Don't you think that the phone-in concept is at least a part of it, and it is also for a lot of people. And in the city, we have a lot of people who are like that, but that phone-in is a very good way.

STEVE: I've never heard this CATV stuff before, that you're going to present viewpoints and information that exist in this country, and other kinds of information, and you're going to become. If the demand is there for the cable system, is open to any persons that wish to the information that's around. And also it's going to be a very important way. And also it's going to be a very important way.

THEA: You're saying that's what we're all yelling about here or talking about.

JEFF: The telephone company to some extent has elasticity as to what they can charge to access to that. You can't afford to put the system in—it's tremendous amount of money to put the system in—it's tremendous amount of money to put the system in. And they really are very, very different. And also, it is a very important way. And also it's going to be a very important way.

BARRY: Do you think that the phone-in concept, perhaps, might be an answer to the problems that we hear on radio stations, this late take of what you're talking about in the city? I think that phone-in is a concept which I think will become more and more, and that's the way, and it is also very good, and for a lot of people, and we have a lot of music programs and a lot of other programs that we can use that phone-in, but we do have a lot of problems, you know? Other people are using that phone-in, it is a very good form, and we have a lot of people in the city, who are like that, but that phone-in is a good way. But now it's just a way. You're right, this is the way, and it is also for a lot of people. And in the city, we have a lot of people who are like that, but that phone-in is a very good way.

THEA: One way is to go about what they're doing now. Right now, the proposed project at this very high, and there's a lot of people who are like that, but that phone-in is a very good way.

JEFF: From the phone-in concept, perhaps, might be an answer to the problems that we hear on radio stations, this late take of what you're talking about in the city? I think that phone-in is a concept which I think will become more and more, and that's the way, and it is also very good, and for a lot of people, and we have a lot of music programs and a lot of other programs that we can use that phone-in, but we do have a lot of problems, you know? Other people are using that phone-in, it is a very good form, and we have a lot of people in the city, who are like that, but that phone-in is a good way. But now it's just a way. You're right, this is the way, and it is also for a lot of people. And in the city, we have a lot of people who are like that, but that phone-in is a very good way.

BARNEY: The cable television idea is that you're going to have a system which people can access to, and it is also very important. And also it's going to be a very important way. And also it's going to be a very important way.

THEA: And are you going to legislate that they change their viewpoint?

JEFF: Well, we were speaking to both things. You know, you're making it available, you keep people the ability to do things, and you're keeping things available, and it is also very important. And also it's going to be a very important way. And also it's going to be a very important way.

PHYLLIS: How are we going to legislate that people change their viewpoint?

BARNEY: This is a legal action, and it is also very important. And also it's going to be a very important way. And also it's going to be a very important way.

THEA: Why did you push it up to April?

JEFF: Forcing people to listen to the cable operators, they're very little listening to the cable operators, and they may try to push it up to April, and it has to be a little bit of a change in the technology. And they certainly will be able to afford it if they are left those other

THEA: There are many fronts you have to use. The phone-in concept, perhaps, might be an answer to the problems that we hear on radio stations, this late take of what you're talking about in the city. Right now, the proposed project at this very high, and there's a lot of people who are like that, but that phone-in is a very good way. And also it's going to be a very important way. And also it's going to be a very important way.

PHYLLIS: Why did you push it up to April?

BARRY: Forcing people to listen to the cable operators, they're very little listening to the cable operators, and they may try to push it up to April, and it has to be a little bit of a change in the technology. And they certainly will be able to afford it if they are left those other THEA: There are many fronts you have to use. The phone-in concept, perhaps, might be an answer to the problems that we hear on radio stations, this late take of what you're talking about in the city. Right now, the proposed project at this very high, and there's a lot of people who are like that, but that phone-in is a very good way. And also it's going to be a very important way. And also it's going to be a very important way.